

Reading Group Gold

Money, A Memoir Women, Emotions, and Cash by Liz Perle

ISBN: 978-0-312-42627-9 | 2006

About this Guide

The following author biography and list of questions about Money, A Memoir are intended as resources to aid individual readers and book groups who would like to learn more about the author and this book. We hope that this guide will provide you a starting place for discussion, and suggest a variety of perspectives from which you might approach Money, A Memoir.

About the Book

Long ago, and not entirely consciously, Liz Perle made a quiet contract with cash: she would do what it took to get it—work hard, marry right—but she didn't want to have to think about it too much. The subject of money had, since childhood, been quietly sidestepped, a shadowy factor whose private influence was impolite to discuss. This deliberate denial eventually exacted its price, however, when a sudden divorce left Perle with no home, no job, and a four-year-old with a box of toys. She realized she could no longer afford to leave her murky and fraught relationship with money unexamined.

What Perle discovered as she reassembled her life was that almost every woman she knew also subscribed to this strange and emotional code of discretion—even though it laced through their relationships with their parents, lovers, husbands, children, friends, coworkers, and communities. Women who were all too willing to tell each other about their deepest secrets or sexual assets still kept mum when it came to their financial ones.

In Money, A Memoir, Perle attempts to break this silence, adding her own story to the anecdotes and insights of psychologists, researchers, and more than 200 “ordinary” women. It turned out that when money was the topic, most women needed permission to talk. The result is an insightful, unflinching look at the once subtle and commanding influence of money on our every relationship.

“Perle uncovers a wealth of emotions attached to money and a sisterhood of denial about finances. . . . Reading her book will make you realize you are not alone.” —People

Reading Group Gold

“Tackles some intriguing and important questions about a subject that too many nice girls were raised never to talk about at all.” —Fortune

“A smart, compelling analysis.” —The New York Times

About the Author

Liz Perle, who worked in book publishing as an editor and publisher for more than twenty years, recently joined the nonprofit world where she is the editor in chief of Common Sense Media, the nation’s leading nonpartisan organization designed to help families make the best media choices for their children. She is also the author of When Work Doesn’t Work Anymore. Perle lives in San Francisco with her husband and two children.

Discussion Questions

1. Every woman harbors fantasies about what money will do for her. What are the most common ones? Discuss how “magical thinking” contributes to avoiding the reality of one’s financial situation. Why do many people defiantly spend exactly when they shouldn’t? Is there such a thing as “retail therapy”?
2. What are some of the common fears women have when it comes to money? Have any of these fears ever come true? Why are they so prevalent? Why does anxiety often persist even when one has an outward sense of security?
3. Discuss how a woman’s bank balance affects her self-esteem.
4. Why do more women than men ignore money issues? Is there an actual difference in their approach that can be attributed to gender? Why do men equate money with power while women connect it to love? Is it easier for women to disconnect from money because their identities are not as tied to it?
5. Do women sometimes feel that money is immoral? Do they resent the fact that they need it? Do they resent having to take care of themselves financially? Why is money often associated with shame?
6. Many women’s relationships to money are like their relationships to food. Discuss how money can make one compulsive.
7. Discuss a woman’s independence and her ambivalence toward it with regards to money.
8. It has been found that men use money as a differentiator while women use it to form bonds and friendships. Do you agree that women tend to minimize financial disparities for the sake of harmony? How is a woman's desire to please connected to her financial security?

Reading Group Gold

9. How did the baby boomers lose sight of the principles of their generation and create a class of consumers? Why do so many people spend far beyond their means? Whose fault is it that so many people are nearing retirement with no safety net? Have expectations really changed? How did we arrive at the need for luxury, not just comfort?

10. Consider the ways in which the financial lessons of our parents affect us as adults and parents. How can we resolve the quandary of living up to both a father's role of providing financial security and a mother's role of maternal protection? Is it possible to reconcile these conflicting identities by which we define ourselves in terms of money? Discuss family legacies with mixed messages. How have women tried to play both roles today and can they succeed?

11. Why don't women ask to get paid what they are worth? Are they afraid that they don't deserve it, or that it will make them appear too materialistic, or selfish? Why are they willing to sacrifice money for connection?

12. When a boy has a job—like mowing lawns—he's often praised as being enterprising. When a girl has one—like babysitting—she is often told she's good with children. What messages do these two forms of praise carry? What are the repercussions?

13. Discuss money as an aphrodisiac and as social validation.

14. Women and men often interpret making a purchase in different ways. Is keeping finances separate a way to keep a marriage together? Money is often a point of contention in any relationship. How can it be neutralized as a subject?

15. Discuss money's power in a marriage. Do couples take on compensatory roles like "hoarder" and "spender"? What are the repercussions of separating finances? Does it change the balance of power in a marriage? What happens when women make more money than their mates? Or the other way around? Can money trap women in marriages?

16. Why is it easier for women to take care of money and budgets in their businesses but not in their personal lives? Is it possible to demystify money, give it less emotional weight? Is it conceivable to perceive money as a means to an end instead of merely a goal?

17. Discuss how we might communicate the limits of money to our children and the younger generation. What are some of the ways that one can be happy with what one has, rather than what one wants?