The Husbands Reading Group Guide

Welcome to the Reading Group Guide for The Husbands. Please note: In order to provide reading groups with the most informed and thought-provoking questions possible, it is necessary to reveal important aspects of the plot of this novel—as well as the ending. If you have not finished reading The Husbands, we respectfully suggest that you consider waiting before reviewing this guide.

1. In your ideal world, what is one thing you wish a partner would do to help without being asked?
2. At what point in the story did you start to believe something was off about the residents of Dynasty Ranch, and what does that reveal to you about your own sense of social norms?
3. In Chapter 21, Nora surmises that her boss and mentor Gary “thinks the two of them have the same job and that he’s just better at it.” Similarly, throughout the novel’s first half, Hayden believes he’s doing his part, trying his best. Do you believe the men in the novel are truly oblivious to the disparities in the burdens of domestic labor or only willfully so? If the current social system defaults to women as both the managers and the primary performers of domestic tasks, what incentive do men have to change a status quo that directly benefits them?
4. The book spends a significant amount of time exploring the plight of the working mother through the eyes of Nora, a soon-to-be mother of two twins, but how does the undue burden of domestic and emotional labor negatively impact not just mothers but all women?
5. In Chapter 13, Nora’s work friend, Cameron Drummer, explains the theory of the lazy traveler: “Two people are traveling together, and no matter what their two individual personality types might be, one person will start doing. . . . That person starts figuring out which way to the metro, what the day's itinerary is, how to exchange currency, all that stuff, and the other one, they sit back. . . . Because it's being done for them. They don't pay attention to which way they're going. . . . They're along for the ride. Because they can be. They become the lazy traveler." Is Cameron's theory correct when it comes to partners sharing the responsibilities of a household? To what extent, if any, are women complicit in perpetuating the imbalance in domestic and other "invisible" labor?

6. Cornelia seems to live by a code of teleological ethics, believing that if the goal is morally important enough, any method of achieving it is acceptable. Up to what point were you willing to buy into Cornelia's logic? Is there a moment when you think Cornelia broke with her own moral code?
7. In what ways does The Husband's Secret conform to the original conceit of The Stepford Wives and in what ways does it depart from that?
8. In Chapter 5, Nora has a late-night discussion with her best friend, Andi Ogsby, about the relationship dynamics between Andi and her ex-girlfriend, Martha. Are shared household responsibilities an inevitable battlefield in any domestic partnership? What is the role of gender, specifically, in these conversations?
9. Penny specializes in giving warm, thoughtful advice. What is the kindest piece of advice you could offer to yourself during this period of your life?
10. Do you feel sorry for the men of Dynasty Ranch? Why or why not?
11. Assuming one does not believe that brainwashing men through the Trojan horse of couples therapy is a viable solution to the disproportionate strain of the "second shift" on women, what is?
12. Cornelia's daughter, Francine, seems to have mixed feelings about her mother's couples' therapy scheme. What effect might growing up in a place like Dynasty Ranch have on a child?
13. What do you make of Nora's decision in the last line of the book? Were you surprised? Did you find this final choice in or out of character for her—how so? Is she justified?
14. Let's say tomorrow you are given the keys to a new house in Dynasty Ranch complete with all the amenities. How does your life change?
